THE DISAPPOINTMENTS OF YOUTH,
A NOVEL.

BY GEORGE WATTERSTON, Esq.
OF WASHINGTON CITY,
Author of the Lawyer and Child of Feeling.

The celebrity of this author's "LAWYER," and "CHILD OF FEELING" induced the publishers to engage in this work, and without detracting from the merits of the former, feel themselves justified in stating that his GLENCARN is superior to either. It is submitted without further recommendation, with a wish, that the American reviewers may give further encouragement to this young gentleman's endeavors to entertain instruct and moralize his fellow citizens, in a way seemingly well calculated to attract their attention.

REVENUE.

There are three ways of coming at it—First, by contracting our expences—Secondly, by allowing a free commerce—Thirdly, by becoming stock-jobbers. The last is the poison of the fair and honest, and the instrument of foul and knavish republicanism. Such was Mr. Jefferson's most settled creed. If the two first are rejected, the third is the last miserable refuge. A refuge from true friends to an inveterate enemy. To the same enemy Mr. Adams fled for help by his eight per centum loan, and expedited his ruin. Will Mr. Madison who is regarded by his devotees, as the cool, discerning, upright statesman be goaded into this tract, by an unwary oversight? Had Mr. Adams discovered his errors and retraced his steps, the candour, patriotism and integrity of a self-condemnation, would have poured into his granary the harvest of popularity, which Mr. Jefferson reaped. Mr. Jefferson dimished our taxes, and yet caused our treasury to overflow by contracting our expences. It is admitted that the present military expences are as great as Mr. Adams's, and that they press no harder upon England, than his did upon France. But there is an argument in their favor which we shall make the subject of the next number.

IMPERIAL DIVORCE!

CONSERVATIVE SENATE.

SITTING OF THE 16th DEC. 1809.

Extract from the register of the Conservative Senate of Saturday, December 16, 1809.

The Conservative Senate, assembled to the number prescribed by the 9th article of the act of the constitution, of 13th Dec. 1799.

Having seen the act drawn up, the 15th of the present month, by the prince arch-chancellor of the empire, of which the following is the tenor:

The year 1808, and the 15th day of the month of December, nine o'clock in the evening, we John James Regis Cambeceres, prince arch-chancellor of the empire, which are attributed to us by title 2, art. 14, of the statute of the imperial family, and in virtue of orders addressed to us by his majesty the emperor and king, in a sealed letter of that day's date, of which the following is the tenor:

"His majesty the emperor and king condescended to address us in the following words:

"My cousin the prince arch-chancellor, I have forwarded you a letter dated this day, to order you to my chamber, in order to make known the resolution that I and the empress my dear wife, have taken. I rejoice that the kings, queens and princesses, my brothers and sisters, my brothers-in law and sisters-in-law, my step daughter and step son by adoption, as well as my mother, are present at what I have to make known to you.

"The policy of the monarchy, the interest and want of my people, which have constantly guided all my actions will that I leave my children, inheritors of my love for my people, the throne on which providence has seated me. For several years I have lost all hope of having children by my marriage with my well beloved wife the empress Josephine: it is this which has led me to sacrifice the sweetest affections of of my heart, to hearken to nothing but the welfare of the state and to a dissolution of our marraige.

"Arrived at the age of forty years, I hope to live long enough to raise up in my spirit and character the children which it may please providence to give me. God knows how much this resolution has cost my heart; but there is no sacrifice which is above my courage, when it is demonstrated to be useful to the welfare of France.

"It is necessary to add, that far from having ever given me any cause of complaint; on the contrary I think it incumbent to praise the attachment and affection of my well beloved wife; she has embellished fifteen years of my life; the remembrance of it will ever be engraven in my heart. She was crowned with my hands; I wish her to retain the rank and title of empress; but above all, that she will never doubt my sentiments, and that she holds me always her best and dearest friend."

His majesty the emperor and king having finished his discourse, the empress queen spoke in the following words:

"With the permission of our august and dear husband, it is my duty to declare, that having lost all hopes of having children to satisfy the wants of the policy and interests of France, I am pleased to give him the greatest proof of attachment and devotedness which has ever been given on earth. I hold all his munificence, I was crowned by his hands, and from the height of the throne I have received nothing but testimonials of the affection and love of the French people.

"I must acknowledge these sentiments in consenting to the dissolution of a marriage which is henceforth an obstacle to the welfare of France, which deprives her of the happiness of being one day governed by the descendants of a great man so evidently raised up by providence to efface the evils of a terrible revolution, and to re-establish the altar, the throne and the social order. But the dissolution of my marriage will in no ways change the sentiments of my heart. The emperor will always have in me his best friend. I know how much this act, commanded by policy and so great interests, has rent asunder his heart; but we mutually glory in the sacrifice we make to the good of the country.

Upon which their imperial and royal majesties having demanded of us the act of their respective declarations even as of the mutual consent which they contain, and that their majesties give the effect of their will to the dissolution of their marriage, as also of the power which their majesties have conferred upon us, to pursue throughout whatever else may be needful, and to whom it may have appertained, yielding to the orders and requisitions of their majesties, we have given the said act, and prepared in consequence, the present process-verbal to serve and make valid even as of right; to which process verbal their majesties have affixed their signatures, which, after having been signed by the kings, queens, princesses and prince, present, was signed by us and countersigned by the secretary of state to the royal family, written with his own hand."

Done at the palace of the Thuilleries, the day, hour and year as above.

CAMBECERES,
Prince Arch Chancellor
Count REGNAULT,
Of St. John of Angely.

Having seen the project of the senatus consultum in the form prescribed by the 67th article of the act of the constitution of 4th August, 1802.

After having heard the orators of the council of state and the report of the special commission appointed in the sitting of this day, upon the motives of the said project.

Its adoption having been resolved upon by the number of voices prescribed by the 50th article of the act of the constitution of the 4th August, 1802, decrees:

Art. 1. The marriage contracted between the emperor Napoleon and the empress Josephine is dissolved:

2. The empress Josephine will preserve the title and rank of a crowned empress queen.

Art. 3. Her dower is fixed at the annual income of two millions of francs, to be paid out of the state treasury.

Art. 4. All the provisions which shall have been made by the emperor in favor of the empress Josephine, out of the funds of the civil list, shall be obligatory on his successors.

Art. 5. The present senatus consultum shall be transmitted by message to his imperial and loyal majesty.

The President and Secretaries.

Signed,

Alexandria Daily Gazette.

MONDAY, MARCH 5.

To the Editor of the Alexandria Gazette.

SIR,

At this eventful period, when our country, from its situation, is entitled to the sympathy and talents of every individual, who enjoys its protection, I have ventured to offer myself to the public, under the conviction that altho' my matter should not be interesting enough to command attention my motives will be sufficiently pure to free me from censure. The dangers which surround us, and the destruction which we seem scarcely able to avoid, have too long been the subject of school-boy's essays, newspaper paragraphs, and congressional speeches, to amuse a reader by their novelty, or to entitle any future writer to a patent for their discovery. But the writer who now addresses you, is not anxious to amuse by the novelty of his style, or the elegance of his diction: and it is equally foreign to his purpose, to claim to himself the honor of having been the first to awake you to a sense of your danger. He has hitherto been a silent and retired individual, whose youth and inexperience have prevented him from taking an active part in that cause, which his heart has ever warmly espoused: but from his retirement he has seen the embarrassment of his country; and has traced it to its source: He has heard the tocsin of alarm, sounded by opposing patriotism; and has observed with regret, how many thousands have heard, without attending to its call: He has looked to foreign nations for the destruction of your commerce, the neglect of your agricultural interests, the diminution of your revenue, and the consequent emptiness of your treasury; but his eyes have involuntarily wandered back to his native shores: He has anxiously endeavored to discover in foreign climes the cause of your divisions at home, and of your present condition, so degraded in the estimation of the surrounding world; but a mirror has every where been presented to his view, reflecting nothing but the image of his fallen and unfortunate country. The following words of a celebrated political writer,* point with peculiar and astonishing accuracy, to the ordinary source of evils such as these; and impliedly propose a remedy, the most effectual, yet the most easy to be administered by a free and independent people. "The ruin or prosperity of a state (says he) depends so much on the administration of its government, that to be acquainted with the merits of a ministry, we need only observe the condition of the people. If we see them obedient to the laws, prosperous in industry, united at home, and respected abroad, we may reasonably presume that their affairs are conducted by men of experience, ability and virtue. If on the contrary, we see an universal spirit of distrust, and dissatisfaction, a rapid decay of trade, dissensions in all ports of the empire, and a total want of respect in the eyes of foreign powers, we may pronounce, without hesitation, that the government of that country is weak, distracted, and corrupt." So truly descriptive of the situation of our country, is the latter part of this extract, that had not the letter, from which it is taken, been long before the public, we should naturally have considered it as intended, not for Great Britain, but for the U. States; and instead of the duke of Grafton, and lord North, we should have looked to Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison, for "the weak, distracted and corrupt" administration of the government of their country. It is almost unnecessary to add, that its author, after having thus eloquently exposed the evil, turned his whole thoughts and endeavors to the application of a remedy. By producing a change of men, he hoped also to produce a beneficial change of measures.

Perhaps, sir, at some future period, when objects more immediately entitled to our attention, shall cease to exist; and when congress shall have made that important decision, on which the fate of our country depends, such thoughts as these may occupy my mind, and constitute the subject of other communications. It will then be necessary to follow the last and present administrations, through their long and ruinous course, and to shew from their most important acts, that though they have undertaken with confidence, the management of the national vessel, they have been either too ignorant to conduct it with skill, or too skilful to conduct it with virtue: but from the remoteness of that period, when the people shall be again called upon to make a solemn declaration of their sentiments, such an exposition would, for the present, be unnecessary: the prescription would most probably be forgotten before the time for its application should arrive, and would therefore only weary the attention of your readers, and unnecessarily occupy that portion of your paper allotted to more important purposes. But to the point. The senate of our country, as if but just awaked from their long slumber of ignorance and folly, and seized by an instantaneous fit of patriotism, have at length, taken the first step, towards a restoration of their country's rights. The war of proclamations is suspended; at least for a while; a deadly blow is aimed at all commercial restrictions on ourselves; an the real patriots of the country, are allowed a few moments for free respiration. Let these moments be employed to advantage. In a firm, collected body, let them meet the question which is soon to be brought before them, and adopt such measures, as the interests of their country requires, and as their constituents will expect.

It is with a view to point out that course, which, it appears to me, must terminate in the prosperity of our country, and which (I am confident) would be most acceptable to a large majority of the people, that I have taken up my pen: and it has sometimes happened, that while the wisest politicians of the age have hesitated, the pen of some private individual, "more lucky than the rest," has given the first impulse to their minds, and determined the direction of their course.

Were I on the floor of the house of representatives, my first object should be, to procure the passage of the bill, relating to our commercial interests, precisely as it has come from the senate. We should thus be placed (as nearly as circumstances would permit) in the same situation, in which we were at the commencement of foreign aggressions on our neutral rights; and before we had resorted to our present system of warfare against ourselves. This (it is true) would be an acknowledgment of the errors, into which, we have latterly fallen: but would it not be better, candidly to acknowledge errors, of which we are all convinced, than to rush obstinately forward to our own destruction? Or, are the ruling party determined, when they do fall, to fall like Sampson; and to bury in the same grave with themselves, the temple of their country's liberty?

It is asserted by some, that the passage of this bill, as it now stands, would not only be an acknowledgment of our errors, but an absolute abandonment of our rights. I grant that the mere passage of this bill, if not followed by other measures, would be an abandonment of our rights, and a prostitution of the best interests of our country: for without attaining the ends, for which our canvass is to be filled, and our ports are to be opened to the world, we should thus expose the only vulnerable part about us, and offer our unprotected fleet, to the poisoned shafts of the belligerents. But who, after having proceeded so far, would be willing to stop? The real friends of their country do not uphold this bill, as a high sounding assertion of their rights, or as a measure of dignified retaliation; but they advocate it merely because they think it calculated to bring them back to the goal from whence they have started. Here they are anxious to begin again, and pursue the only right and proper course. — Let the bill then be passed, in its simple and native form. It needs not the garb of a war proclamation, the gewgaws of armed merchantmen, or the still more imposing decorations of a convoying force. Instead of these, let congress turn their attention to the establishment of a navy, not of gun boats and torpedoes; but such a navy as would have been, ere this, (had it not been for the mistaken notions of a philosophic President) respectable and formidable. In the mean time let us look towards those decrees & orders, on which we rest our complaints; excluding all objects of minor importance from our view. If I am not mistaken, it is now universally admitted, that the French decrees preceded the British orders in council, about a year: and that had we, instead of permitting ourselves to be made the dupes of France, retaliated her decrees, the British orders would never have been issued. Let us then, after our commercial restrictions shall have been removed, despatch a minister extraordinary to the former, and through him demand, as an acknowledgment of our rights, the immediate repeal of her unjust decrees. Should our demand be attended to, and her decrees repealed; the basis on which the British orders rest, being thus removed, they will, according to the acknowledgment of their author, fall to the ground of themselves. If on the contrary our demand be rejected, retaliation will ensue; and a war or non-intercourse with France be the necessary consequence. A minister might then be dispatched to Great-Britain, on a similar errand; and I have no doubt, but that the justice of our demand, would be instantly acknowledged, and the greatest bar to the setttlement of all our differences be speedily removed. If not, I assert (and without fear of contradiction) that from Maine to Georgia, scarcely one true born American could be found, unwilling to maintain his country's rights. How noble would be that contest, in which every action of the hand would be directed by a correspondent impulse from the heart!

Such, Sir, are my views of the important subject now before the public. Such (I am confident) would have been the conduct of Washington— Such actually was the conduct of that poor old man, John Adams, before his heart had been corrupted, and his hand prostituted—And such ought to be the only policy of the U. States at present. I have thus, sir, with diffidence offered these few observations to the public. If, however, by means such as are proposed, my country should be saved, I shall be amply compensated; and will thankfully offer up my prayers to Heaven, for having preserved, what I may justly style "onime dimidium meæ": in them you have the sentiment of one, who, if his abilities had been proportioned to his zeal, and his strength of mind to the patriotic warmth of his heart, would have addressed his countrymen, more in the style and language of CHATHAM.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in N. York, to his friend in this town, dated Feb. 28, 1810.

"A vessel arrived here last evening with the pleasing intelligence of Guadaloupe having been taken by the British, after much hard fighting; and they are immediately to proceed against St. Eustatia, and St. Martins, which must soon fall; and this I trust will always be the way that Bonaparte will obtain ships, colonies, &c."

NEW-YORK, February 27.

By the ship Pacific, we learn that English papers to the 10th of January had been received at Fayal, but that they did not contain any intelligence of importance. The U. S. ship of war John Adams had arrived in England in 18 days from New-York.

NORFOLK, Feb. 28.

Guadaloupe.—This important island, the only one that remained (St. Martin's and St. Eustatia excepted) of all the valuable possessions which France once held in the western world, has fallen under the power of her rival.

Captain Robertson, who arrived here yesterday in the brig Experiment from St. Bartholomews, which place he left the 10th inst. informs us that previous to his departure, a gentleman arrived from Guadaloupe, who was in the island when it capitulated. There was little resistance made except at one fort, which was defended very galiantly, and was carried by storm in which nearly all the French were killed. The terms are nearly the same as those granted to Martinique. Several letters confirm the above, and after capt. Robertson sailed, he spoke a British government brig, who informed him of the surrender of the island. A part of the forces were expected to leeward to reduce St. Martin's and St. Eustatia, who could make no resistance. Thus is realized the dream of Napoleon—"ships, colonies, and commerce."

We learn from capt. Otis, who arrived this morning from St. Bartholomews, some further particulars of the attack and surrender of Guadaloupe. The French, as it was expected retired to the heights near Basseterre, where they were strongly entrenched. On Saturday the 3d. inst. the British made a general attack on all the French line, and were repulsed with the loss of 500 men.

On Sunday the 4th of Feb. the British commander directed another assault, having ordered his troops to take the flints from their muskets and put the issue on the bayonet. The French received the second assault with equal bravery, and the British lost 300 men in killed; but being overpowered a cessation of arms was requested and granted—after which a capitulation was agreed upon, and the island surrendered on Sunday the 4th of February. One French regiment with the exception of 5 men were killed in the assault.

WAS STOLEN last evening from the house of the subscriber, corner of Prince and Royal streets, between 7 and 8 o'clock, a small TRUNK, containing sundry important family papers, of no use to any but the owner, and 25 dollars in money, more or less. Whoever will leave the Trunk and papers with the Printer, or at the Post-Office shall receive the 25 dollars as a gratuity and no questions asked.

JOHN FRIGNET.

☞ This trunk contains, Masonry papers; ornaments; jewels; titles; instructions old and modern; 3 commissions, surveyor, surveyor general and engineer; 2 marriage contracts; certificate of my baptism, my son and my 1st wife, certificate of her burial and her daughter; 3 pocket books containing all sorts of papers, French and English, concerning my business and my family; 3 purses containing gold, dollars, small money and strange pieces of silver; 1 iron magnetic; 1 silver pencil case; 1 bodkin and tooth pic of gold; a picture of my son framed with gold, &c. &c.
